Turn Website Visitors into Clients & Current Clients into Repeat Business

How to Turn Clicks into Clients

You wouldn't plant a garden and then not water the seeds, would you? Or invest in exotic tropical fish and forget to feed them? Of course not! Likewise, visitors to your website need more than an open door if you hope to welcome them, nurture them as customers, and grow your business. Now that they've found you, how do you keep them engaged?

You've launched your new website, now how will you build relationships with visitors? The answer: make sure their first visit isn't their last. You have high hopes for your website as both a marketing tool and a business destination. So how can you turn visitors into clients, and clients into repeat sales? Email marketing provides the tools you need to build customer relationships, grow your business, and increase sales.

Introduction to Email Marketing

Email marketing is a fast, easy, and affordable way to invite visitors back to your website and build profitable customer relationships. Email marketing is the ultimate marketing tool – it can complement and enhance search engine marketing efforts and it works great as a stand-alone tool if it's the only activity you do to market your business.

Turn Website Visitors into Clients & Current Clients into Repeat Business

Whether you're emailing a newsletter about your business or organization, a coupon or promotional notice, an event invitation or a simple "thank you for visiting our website," email is the best way to instantly and consistently reach out to potential customers while leads are still warm. Tell website visitors you appreciate their interest and inform them of your expertise and all that you have to offer. Keep your business in front of current and prospective customers so they'll remember you when the need for your product or service arises. That way when they're ready to be serviced, they'll take action from you.

Launching a website is an exciting step toward expanding your business or service, but without a means to communicate with visitors, you may not get the desired results. Once potential customers find you, you must reach back out immediately and show them you value their patronage!

When potential clients find your website, welcome them in your door, shake their hands, and invite them back for more. Email marketing is the tool that helps you to initiate those critical business-to-consumer relationships. Otherwise you risk their clicking away, never to return again. Let's get started.

The Challenge:

Connect with Website Visitors

You've launched your business or association website. What's next?

Perhaps you're engaging in search engine marketing through your Web hosting service. Popular means include pay-per-click advertising, search engine keywords and Ad Words, and/or search engine optimization (see other search engine marketing resources in the "Learn How to Market via the Web" section under Market Your Practice). You might also be running a newspaper or yellow pages ad that includes your Web address (URL), which you should now display on all your marketing collateral including signage, brochures, and business cards (see "Yellow Pages Advertising" under the Use Our Do-It-Yourself Marketing Tools section).

Tip: Use email marketing to inform your current mailing list about your new website launch, website redesign, or new website features. Email all your friends, family, and business associates that you're up and running on the Internet!

Turn Website Visitors into Clients & Current Clients into Repeat Business

However interested parties find your website, their arrival on your virtual doorstep doesn't guarantee a sale. Fact is most online visitors don't convert to customers on the very first visit. Most marketing experts agree that it takes an average of seven contacts with a prospect before they will engage your services.

Once visitors find your website, your challenge to connect with them is threefold:

1. Capture visitors' contact information, particularly their email addresses
2. Cultivate those leads immediately, so website visitors become prospects
3. Convert prospects into clients and one-time clients into loyal patrons who come back for repeat business and who also refer other business to you

Maximize your marketing investment and give your website a chance to be a vital part of your business operation. Your site launch is a first step. Now let's engage your visitors and convert them into clients.

The Solution:

Email Marketing Converts Visitors into Clients

Visitors may not engage your service on their first visit to your website. How do you convert new website visitors into clients? Email marketing helps you reach out to them immediately and invite them back into your world. First you'll need to ask visitors to sign up for your email list (more on how to below). Then you can use email communications to build valuable relationships and to learn more about your clients over time.

Regular email communication establishes your expertise and plants the seeds that your service is the best. Email marketing works across the sales cycles. Some potential clients may be in a research phase seeking more information about your company, product or service. They're not ready to act today but they're thinking about it. You want to be in front of those prospects as a trusted source who can educate (and persuade) them, as well as those clients ready to book your service online today.

Eventually clients will be ready to act and when they are, you want them to think of your business first. Email marketing is immediate, personal, and flexible enough to fit into any kind of business or organization's marketing plans. Tracking reports allow you to see where clients are clicking so you can learn more about their interests and buying patterns. Then you can target mailings to audience segments' particular interests. The possibilities to expand any business using email marketing are great. But first, some email marketing basics.

How Email Marketing Works for Website Owners

Permission-based email marketing is a cost-effective way for business owners, associations, entrepreneurs and other website owners to reach out and connect with their customers without the costs and timelines associated with print publications.

Constant Contact's email marketing service features templates which you can customize to match your website branding, colors, and fonts—without any technical skills. Email marketing communications may be informational or promotional (we recommend sending a mix of both).

Templates include...

- email newsletters
- offers (with place for coupons)
- event invitations
- sales announcements

Tip: Archive your email newsletter features on your website. It's a great way to build out website content and develop a body of work that shows your professional expertise.

Besides being simple to use and affordable, email marketing lets you follow up with leads immediately before they go cold. This makes it a powerful tool for website owners, especially those on a tight marketing budget. Email marketing enables you to proactively communicate with prospects and existing clients instead of passively waiting for them to return to your website. It is a highly effective way to convert leads into clients, increase sales, drive traffic between online and offline businesses, and develop customer loyalty that fuels profitable repeat sales, all for just pennies a client.

How to Collect Website Visitors' Email Addresses

You can't engage website visitors with email marketing unless you get their permission and obtain their email addresses. Permission isn't just polite...it's the law. Legitimate email marketers must get subscribers' permission to send them email marketing communications.

The first step is getting new site visitors engaged enough to share their email addresses with you. Put a "Join My Mailing List" box or button right on your homepage along with a direct call to action and a reward. Entice visitors with something valuable that you give them in exchange for their email addresses, such as a free...

- educational seminar or webinar that helps them evaluate your services
- consultation or evaluation (which can lead to a proposal for their business)
- white paper that educates them about the problems your business solves
- email newsletter where you regularly share your expertise with articles, client testimonials, and case studies

Collect email addresses in a simple, straightforward way, providing a clear notice that people are joining your list. This applies to offline networking as well. If you're collecting business cards at a trade show, make sure you're clear that by giving you their card, that person is subscribing to your email list.

Ask permission first and send regular, informative, valuable email marketing communications and your clients will come clicking back for more. If you do it right, they'll forward your email to their friends, generating additional leads for your business.

Email Marketing Boosts Search Engine Marketing Efforts

Email Marketing complements search engine marketing and optimization efforts by giving businesses the tools to reconnect immediately and directly with new website visitors. The first step is acquiring an email address on the first very visit. Once you have that prospect's email address, a multistep email marketing communications program lets you...

- welcome website visitors into your business world
- tell them more about your products and services
- notify them of your business's news, promotions, and events
- increase brand awareness and establish your expertise
- track buying and behavior patterns and segment mailing lists by audience
- build valuable customer relationships that turn website visitors into clients, and current clients into repeat sales

Being found online is a start, but communication is what builds client relationships and increases sales. Whether email marketing is a complement to your other online or offline marketing campaigns or it's the only type of marketing you do, it's a cost-effective way to reach out to prospects and bring them back into your world.

Ready to put the power of email marketing to work for your website? Here's how.

Step 2: Build your contact list. Once visitors arrive at your website, you need to entice them to share their email addresses with you so that you can add them to your mailing list and initiate your relationship-building email communications.

Constant Contact also makes it easy to import and manage your existing list into our online system, or create a new list. (No list is too small to get started!)

- Invite visitors to join your email list by adding a signup box to your homepage or landing page using Constant Contact's customizable Signup Box.
- Entice visitors to sign up by offering them something of value for free in exchange for sharing their email addresses. Examples: A free whitepaper, consultation, educational webinar, or an e-newsletter are all good incentives.
- If you're a new business, create a list by adding the names and contact information of family, friends, and colleagues.

Step 3: Create your email campaign using one of Constant Contact's professionally-designed templates.

- Thank new visitors for signing up for your mailing list.
- Send them something short and simple such as a coupon, special promotion, event invitation, or a newsletter article related to your expertise.
- Your first mailing should educate visitors about your business and engage them with something interesting. Make it meaningful and not too sales-focused.

Step 4: Send a preview test message to yourself and a few close friends to get the hang of it. Invite their feedback and make adjustments and final edits.

Conclusion:

Email Marketing is an Easy, Affordable Way to Boost Your Web Business

Whether you're sending an email newsletter, or a promotional notice, email marketing keeps your business in front of your clients. It helps establish your brand identity and drives visitors back to your website, where they can learn more about your expertise and what your business or service offers. Search engine marketing and other advertising drive visitors to your website door. Email marketing welcomes them and develops client relationships and that's what ultimately drives sales. Isn't that why you launched a website in the first place?
